Thursday evening. 5th inst at Cinton Hall Lecture Room, Prof. Ratin gives his tenth Lecture on Chemistry.

Members of the Institute, whose yearly dues are payable on the let of February, are requested to call and renew their tickets as early as practicable. The success of the Institute in her Lectures, Schools and Classes, is entirely dependent upon the prompt payment of yearly dues. Out of 2,500 names etrolled on the books of the Institute, it is to be regretted that there are so few who really estimate the great good the Institute is doite, and the much greater good that could be done if a larger proportion paid their dues promptly. Yearly dues $2; to new members, an initiation fee o $1 is required. Minors $1 only for yearly subscriptions.

WRITING.—Mr. DOLBEAR informs the Ladies that he has now a few vacant seats in the day or evening classes. Those who were unable to obtain seats last month, may be accommodated now if they apply early. The style of writing is so elegant and so easily learned, that ladies (mothers and daughters) come from the most distant parts of the city to take lessons. Ladies meet at 10-clock or in the evening.

of the city to take leasons. Leaves meet at 10 clock of in the evening.

The following letter, from one of our first Classical Teachers, is similar to hundreds which Mr. D. has received in reference to his system:

New-York, Dec. 27, 1845.

Dear Sir: I should do injustice to my feelings not to achieve the praification I feel at the rapid improvement my sons have made in Penmunship while under your instruction. At the end of their twelfth lesson they gave may specimen of their rapid off-hand writing, and I must confosal was astonished. Never bad I seen such improvement in so short a time. The more particularly was I gratified, as I had always supposed them to be hereditarily bad writers.
